

Ray Marshall, Secretary of Labor from 1977 to 1981, teaches labor economics at the University of Texas, Austin. In this adaptation of an interview, he argues that the US must increase its supply of educated workers and its demand for a highly-skilled workforce.